Customer Reviews

My newly-reading first grader couldn't put the book down. He finished the 47 or so pages in no time. The vocabulary was challenging, the plot interesting and the illustrations "grown up." It would be interesting to boys and girls, football fans and non-fans alike. If your child is not reading at the 1st grade level and able to decipher a few words like "triumphant" and "defenseman", I recommend Leonard Kessler's "Kick, Pass and Run." The difficult words are one's like "receiver" or "touchdown." Would work for a younger early reader. Note that it is easier, but still about 64 pages long.

This book is so good. The dog steals football plays to make his owner's team win. They win a lot of games with his help. One day Mike told his dog not to come with him and he didn't. Guess what happened then? Read this book to figure it out. You'll love it.

My 11 year old son picked this book out because it was written by his favorite author, Matt Christopher. The book is cute and well written, but is more appropriate for a much younger child. This would make a good book for a 1st or 2nd grader.

We enjoy all Matt Christohers books at our house. GReat for boys who love sports but are not excited about reading.

My first grade son loves dogs and football. This story combines both and was a good read for him. There is even a bit of a lesson about sportsmanship.

I bought this just as my 6 year old son was getting into watching football on tv and pretending he was a football player. Harry the dog can talk to Mike the young boy via telepathy and ends up giving him the plays he overhears the other side planning to help the team win the first game. In the second game, Mike has to decide if he will use Harry's telepathic powers or go without. It's an enjoyable read aloud book with a lesson about how it's not really winning when someone cheats.

A great book for a young reader- our 6 year old sports fanatic, emergent reader, loved it.

I used this book while tutoring a group of struggling readers who loved UT football. We spent a whole week focusing on football especially UT football. The children enjoyed this cute story.
